

At the end of the lesson, the student will be able to:

* talk about the perception of Japanese in owning a car;
mention the advantages and disadvantages of owning a car.

Read the passage

In the early 1980s, it was a dream of almost every man in Japan--young or old-- to have his own car. Wages were still low and owning a car was outside the reach of the average man in the street. Most of the cars on the road were either taxis or government-owned. The few people who did own cars were thought to be very rich. Cars were a status symbol, and the bigger the car, the better.

Those first-time car owners cared for their cars like babies. Besides keeping them immaculately clean, they decorated the interior like their living rooms. Expensive seat covers were mandatory. Car "interior" shops sprang up on every corner. For Japanese men, it was a dream come true.

Let's Talk!

1. Before, car ownership was a symbol of wealth. Is this still true today? Why or why not?
2. Do you agree that Japan has a car culture? If so, what are the factors that caused it to happen?
3. What do you think are advantages and disadvantages of having a car?
4. What kind of car would you rather own– a big or a small car? Explain your answer.
5. Which of the statements about small and big cars do you agree on?
 - > Big cars are better because they are safer in case of accidents.
 - > Big cars waste too much gas and take up too much parking space.
 - > Small cars are better because they are more fuel-efficient and they cost less to own and operate.
